HARDING PASSES CRISIS EPOCH IN ILLNESS PERIOD

Physicians Maintain President
On Road to Recovery
Now.

SAWYER OPTIMISTIC
Flood of Telegrams From His Friends Over Country Received.

(By the Associated Press)
PRESIDENTIAL HEADQUARTERS, PALACE HOTEL, San Francisco, Aug. 1.—An official statement issued at 10 o'clock today by the five doctors attending President Harding said that he was "much exhausted but maintains his normal buoyancy." He was breathing with less difficulty than previously and there was but little cough. The bulletin follows:
"The president is fairly comfortable this morning after a few hours sleep and his breathing is less labored and there is but little cough. He is still much exhausted but maintains his normal buoyancy of spirit. Small amounts of food are being taken regularly and there is regular and satisfactory elimination. Temperature is 99 degrees, pulse 114 and respiration 30. While progress is being made every care is necessary to assure freedom from further complications."

PRESIDENTIAL HEADQUARTERS, PALACE HOTEL, San Francisco, Aug. 1.—An informal statement issued at 8 o'clock today by Brig. Gen. Charles E. Sawyer, the president's personal physician, said that Mr. Harding had spent "a very restful night and his pulse at that hour was 114, temperature 99, respiration 40."

This indicates a decrease in pulse rate and temperature as compared with the last previous bulletin, the pulse rate being less by two and the temperature 1.2 degrees lower. The respiration rate given in the bulletin was the same.

PRESIDENTIAL HEADQUARTERS, PALACE HOTEL, San Francisco, Aug. 1.—President Harding today seemed certain of recovery, barring improbable developments of new complications in his illness, or of equally improbable increase of the present one.

The president awoke shortly after 6 o'clock having had almost a normal amount of sleep. His rest described as the most natural of any during his illness, began before 11 o'clock last night.

Brig. Gen. Charles E. Sawyer, chief of the staff of physicians on the president's case, still was standing by his statement of last night that the crisis had been passed and that the "president is well on the road to recovery." Added to this was a declaration from authoritative sources the only reason for concern for the president's condition was because the patient was president of the United States and not because of any new symptoms or likelihood of any.

Sawyer Makes Statement
"Since we have our toxin well under control I feel safe in saying that we have passed the peak of trouble," was the way General Sawyer summarized the situation in an informal statement.

"I do not want to be too emphatic about the case, we always face complications, but I feel that the crisis is over and that the president is well on the road to recovery."

This feeling was manifestly shared by the other physicians and members of the president's immediate party.

A steady increase in the amount of nourishment being taken by the president was another cause for optimism.

William Wrigley, Jr., presented to Secretary Christian an invitation to the president and Mrs. Harding to spend his days of convalescence at Catalina where he has a large estate.

Neither was the change for the better immediately noticeable by the number of telegrams received. All through the evening the messenger boys continued to make frequent trips with telegrams and got under way again this morning.

Among the messages was one from former President Wilson. None of them was made public.

COURT HOLDS NO WAR IN IRELAND

Maintains Citizens Permitted
Release from Prison on Habeas Corpus Act.

(By the Associated Press)
DUBLIN, Aug. 1.—A state of war does not exist in Ireland, the court of appeals decided today in giving its judgment in the case of Mrs. Nora Connolly O'Brien reversing the opinion of the master of rolls of the chancery division who held that civil war did exist in Ireland on June 15.

Today's decision was looked forward to with great interest and its announcement caused much excitement as it governs the positions of thousands of prisoners held by the government under the plea of military necessity.

The attorney general made strenuous efforts to convince the court that the rebellion was not over and might break out again, but the court was immovable in its decision that a state of war does not exist and that the government has no authority to deny its citizens the privileges of a writ of habeas corpus.

Despite the decision it is recorded as unlikely that there will be no general release of prisoners as the government anticipating a possible adverse court decision has passed through almost all the stages in the bill and the senate a measure legally authorizing it to continue imprisonment and other repressive measures for three months.

DAVIS INDICATES POLITICAL TURN

Kansas Governor Indicates He Will Be Candidate If State Sanctions.

(By the Associated Press)
CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—Without actually casting his hat into the ring Jonathan M. Davis, whose home state of Kansas is booming him for the Democratic presidential nomination, let it be known in a statement issued here that he would by no means refuse such an honor. Kansas Democrats, he said, have made him their first choice and he is "in their hands."

"I have no political ambition," said Governor Davis, who has been in Chicago several days on state business and who started back to Kansas shortly after making public some of his views on politics and the farmer's economic state. "I have gone higher than I ever anticipated and I am thankful to the people of my state for the honors they have conferred on me, but if my party should nominate me—there is a man living in the world who would refuse such an honor? The Democrats of Kansas have made their first choice and I am in their hands."

Solution Of Gem Robbery Seen In Arrest Of Suspects In N. Y.

(By Central Press)
NEW YORK, July 31.—With the arrest of two suspects, each held in jail in default of $125,000 bail, police here believe they have solved the $500,000 Schoelkopf gem robbery of last January.

The men held, Albert Horowitz, thirty-two, and Eugene Moran, twenty-eight, are said to have been positively identified by Mrs. Lillian Meyers as members of the gang of jewel thieves.

The bail fixed for each of the suspects—$125,000—is the highest that has been set in this state for years.

Mrs. Schoelkopf was robbed of her jewels while leaving a fashionable apartment after a New Year's eve party.

The thieves had rented an apartment below the one in which the party was being held. As Mrs. Schoelkopf was leaving she was seized, dragged into the plotters' apartment and stripped of her gems.

By the time she recovered sufficiently to summon assistance the thieves had fled, apparently leaving nothing to identify them.

The robbery had all the earmarks of several other "big jobs" in which wealthy women had been relieved of their jewels.

Detectives, assigned to the case, gradually penetrated the wall of mystery which confronted them at the outset of the investigation and after a search which extended over the greater part of America and even to Europe, Horowitz and Moran were arrested.

WALKER-COOPER BOUT IS SLATED

Kansas City Fighter Will Break Local Champion To Professional List.

Archie Cooper, state amateur middleweight champion, will break clean from the field that gave him rise to his coveted title and take his first rap in the professional class when he meets Johnnie Walker of Kansas City here August 9 in ten rounds of the hardest fighting of his career.

Cooper, by right of his victory over the best in the state in the amateur class was considered ripe for a chance in the big show and Walker, by reason of his numerous marks of achievement in the ring, was considered the best available in the southwest.

Walker has a string of victories in his many years of fighting that look like the list of names on a hotel register. Walker had an enviable record before the war and during his service in the aviation department of our national forces, he established himself as one of the foremost fighters in his weight.

Walker and his manager will arrive here next Tuesday, when he will start a series of workouts for the public. A. R. Dixon, Cooper's manager, stated today that Cooper would go into strenuous training today and continue until the eve of his fight. Cooper is considered in tip-top condition at the present time.

The Cooper-Walker match will be held under the auspices of the Ada Athletic club. Tickets have been printed and placed on sale.

To insure fans of entire satisfaction on ring decision, Lou Cutler, manager of the Coliseum Athletic club of Oklahoma City and well known in fight circles over the state, will referee the bout.

SHIP LIVE FISH 125 MILES ACROSS DESERT TO MARKET

(By the Associated Press)
MEXICALI, Lower California, Aug. 1.—Mullet, of which fish there are great schools in the waters of the Gulf of California below the Colorado river delta, are now being transported alive in tank trucks over the intervening 125 miles of arid desert, and re-shipped from here by express to the various fish markets of the country. Sea bass, weighing from 125 to 300 pounds, and turtle tipping the scales at from 200 to 300 pounds, are to follow in their season.

Fishermen of wide experience pronounce the Gulf of California on the Lower California side the most prolific in all kinds of fish and shell fish on the entire west coast of the Pacific Ocean.

WAREHOUSE BILL IN HELD VALID

Judge Zwick Upholds Constitutionality of Bill in Suit.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Aug. 1.—William H. Zwick, district judge, upheld the constitutionality of the reconstruction league warehouse bill in a decision issued Tuesday dismissing the suit filed by Harry O. Glasser of Enid, state senator, an attorney for John Vette, a Major county farmer. It was indicated that the case would be taken to the supreme court. The petition asked a restraining order against the expenditure of money from the $1,250,000 appropriation made by the 1923 legislature in the warehouse bill.

Demurrer Is Upheld
Zwick's ruling upheld the demurrer presented by assistants of Geo. F. Short, attorney general. The demurrer set up that Vette was not qualified to protest the appropriation, that his action was premature, and that the provisions of the warehouse bill and appropriation were unconstitutional.

Glaser argued that the expenditure was unconstitutional since, as he contended, it resulted in taxation that was not for a public purpose. It is considered certain he will appeal to the supreme court for support of this contention. His brief submitted in district court quoted a number of cases from high courts to the effect that appropriations for the aid of persons in particular occupations were not for public purposes such as would warrant taxation.

State's Credit Not Lent
The request for the injunction also included the allegation that the warehouse bill in effect lent the credit of the state to individuals or associations, which is forbidden by the state constitution.

This was denied by Judge Zwick. The bill was supported both in the legislature and in this litigation by the wheat growers' and cotton growers' associations. Its provisions are that funds from the $1,250,000 appropriation may be lent to associations of farmers who wish to erect local or terminal warehouses for agricultural products.

(By the Associated Press)
CUMBERLAND, C. H. Va., Aug. 1.—Shad R. Wilson, an eye witness testified at the trial of L. C. Garrett this morning that when he was attracted to the Pierce home by the screaming of women on the day the Rev. E. S. Pierce was killed he found Larkin Garrett sitting on the minister and beating him in the face while Robert Garrett stood by with a pistol in his hand.

The witness also testified that he saw Robert Garrett fire several shots into the minister's body both before and after he fell to the ground. He saw no other shots fired. The witness is a carpenter and was at work on a building near the Pierce home when the trouble started.

In telling his story the witness was positive he did not see Rev. Pierce shoot Robert Garrett in the back.

"The first shot I heard I saw the person fall. I did not see Mr. Pierce shoot at all," he said. He also stated that both the Garrett's had pistols in their hands as they passed out of Pierce's gate after the shooting.

WEATHER MAN ON HEAT RAMPAGE IN PARTS OF STATE

Several Cities of State Report
Record - Breaking Temperature.

RECORD FOR ADA

Yesterday Reaches Top-Notch in Mercury Rise at Oklahoma City.

Where—Another temperature record for Ada.

At 2:15 this afternoon, the mercury bounded near the top of its container and stood tottering at a record tilt of 107 degrees and gave notice that it could bulge another degree before the heat of the day had waned.

The high mark of 107 degrees bested the former record of the year, when Ada sweltered under a heat wave at 106 degrees.

The high mark for today was preceded by yesterday's price of the thermometer when it hovered around the 105 mark. The minimum temperature for last night registered 78 degrees.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Aug. 1.—Oklahoma yesterday broiled under a pitiless sun that sent the average temperature of the state to 105.8 degrees, reports to the United States bureau here today revealed.

It was the hottest day of the summer. Oklahoma with 111 topped the list. The lowest temperature reported was 104, while several points recorded 109 degrees. Alva reported 110.

Some relief was promised by the officials of the bureau today although it was said the mercury will register in three figures.

TULSA, Aug. 1.—The official temperature here at 1 o'clock today was 109 degrees and the observer said it would likely be 111 by 3 o'clock. The highest previous record in the past 14 years was 109 in August, 1909.

MUSKOGEE, Aug. 1.—A new high heat record was established here today with a temperature of 107.5 degrees at 1 o'clock. This exceeds the record of 106 of last year.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Aug. 1.—After flirting with the thermometer for several days, Tuesday, the last day of the month, saw the mercury climb to 105.3 degrees, the hottest day of the year. The maximum came in the afternoon at 4 o'clock.

The nearest competitor for the heat record was July 25, when the thermometer registered 105 degrees. The minimum temperature was in the morning at 6:30 o'clock, when the mercury stood at 76 degrees.

Entire State Hot
The entire state sweltered. The thermometer at Enid registered 107 degrees, setting a record for the year, while at Muskogee, it reached 105 degrees, equalling the season's previous high mark. At Tulsa, the hottest day of the season was felt, the thermometer registering 106 degrees.

Oklumgee did not fare so badly, the weather bureau thermometer registering 101 degrees at 3 o'clock and at Bartlesville, the mercury touched 98 degrees.

Partly cloudy weather was scheduled for the entire state Wednesday and Thursday.

Few "Smokes" Sold.

According to the weather bureau, the humidity Tuesday was unusually low. This together with the breezes, accounted for the day seeming cooler than it really was, the weather bureau stated.

It was noticeable Tuesday, that Soda fountains were doing a better business than for the past few days. One salesman in a cigar and cigar stand said that his sales were far below the average, and he blamed it on the hot weather.

Most persons went about their regular business without seeming to realize that it was the hottest day of the year.

CHAPTER XV

That same evening, Jack Fortier sat up late in the library of the Lavergne house, with Aline.

Work held them; there was much to be done. Aline Lavergne was coming to a full and definite grasp of her own affairs, and under Fortier's guidance she was reaching it. Papers were gone over, John Philbrick's accounts were found exquisitely taken care of, the wall safe was given a thorough overhauling. When they had finished, Fortier felt cheerful.

"Things are in fair shape, Miss Aline," he reflected. "You're not pressed for money. Thanks to Captain Wrexham, there'll be no need to irritate, at least this year—that dam can't be rebuilt in time. And I notice it is not being rebuilt."

"It was queer about Captain Wrexham," said the girl. "And he took my mother's picture with him, too—well, he's welcome! Those beautiful things he left in my room—"

"Wrexham thought that picture was of you," said Fortier dryly. "I honestly believe he fell in love with it. Probably he discovered his mistake, and de-camped—a queer chap."

Fortier took up the letter which Capt. Tom Wrexham had left behind him, and tapped it reflectively. He laid it down again on the table.

"This letter," he began, "and the information in it—"

"Oh, about the treasure!" The girl's face lighted up swiftly. "Do you suppose it could really be jewels?"

Fortier laughed. "My dear girl, how should I know? Didn't your father ever mention it?"

"No. And we've been all through the desk, and there's nothing in it. Unless—"

"Unless what?"

She was looking at the desk—a large, massive piece of rosewood, much scuffed in the old style.

"Unless there's some secret compartment in the desk. It's quite possible."

Fortier shook his head. "We'd have to tear the thing apart in order to find it. Do you care to do that?"

"If nothing else shows up—yes. But not tonight; I'm tired."

"You're not going back to the yacht tonight?"

"No." The clear eyes of the girl were slightly troubled. "I'm afraid—I want to stay here, Mr. Fortier. Something about that yacht makes me afraid. Madame Latouche—she's a dear old lady; I've known her all my life, and she's coming to stay with me."

"Then I'll return to the yacht tonight and—"

OPTIMISM IS KEYNOTE OF "THE CUSTARD CUP"

William Fox Latest Production a Cheerful Interpretation of "Honey" Life.

MARY CARR FEATURED

Children Have Great Time While Filming Scene With Ice Cream Sandwich Man

A cheerful and optimistic outlook on life is the keynote of "The Custard Cup," the William Fox production which is booked for two days at the American Theatre, commencing today. Directed by Herbert Brenon. The featured player is Mary Carr, who made such a hit in "Over the Hill."

When the picture was in the making, in order to have the correct atmosphere for the cluster of dwellings which gave the book its title of "The Custard Cup," a reproduction of the place was built over on Long Island, complete in every detail. The court stood on the edge of a lively little town not far from Flushing Bay. Mrs. Penfield's home, which, according to the author, was constructed from an old barn, follows faithfully the description in the book. The lawns and flower bordered walks in front of the other houses were laid out with close attention to proper detail, and the little park in the center of the court, with its single maple tree, was in keeping with the scene.

For several weeks the inhabitants of the place near the Bay watched the building of the movie addition to their town with curious eyes. On the first day of the filming of the "Custard Cup" scenes the arrival of the large company of principals and extras brought hundreds of spectators to the location. All the children, from five to fifteen years of age, were at once invited by Director Herbert Brenon to take part in the amusing ensemble scenes, that are a prominent feature of this portion of the action. The sight of an ice cream sandwich man in the center of the court, and information by the director that he wanted the youngsters to mob the care and be handed out the sandwiches free of charge,

"No, please!" Her hand went out to his arm, her eyes sought his with a suddenly startled look. "No! I don't want to be alone in the house—the servants all have their own quarters. I think I'll go upstairs now, if you'll excuse me. Uncle Neb will bring you the keys when he locks up. Good-night!"

"Good-night, Miss Aline," replied Fortier.

Left alone, he sat smoking and thinking for a space. Again he read over that letter which Wrexham had left, frowning at it in puzzled thought. Certainly there was no trace of any treasure or other mysterious objects in or around the desk, as Philbrick had intimated to Wrexham was the case. Fortier laid the letter down again on the table. Afterward, he remembered having left it there.

"There might be a secret compartment," he reflected, eyeing the desk, "as she thinks. It so, it'd be a hard thing to find. The only way would be to rip off the back of the desk. Well, time enough tomorrow!"

Uncle Neb appeared with the keys, bringing word that everything was locked up for the night, and Fortier went to the east guestroom, which opened on the upper gallery.

When he had undressed and turned out the lights, he stood for a little at one of the French windows, gazing out across the bayou. There were the riding lights of the Watersprite, out in the deeper water of mid-channel. Farther along, amid the trees, a light gleamed from the Macarty house. Frowning, Fortier turned away at length, and sought his bed.

He lay for a while, wondering if the Macartys would try anything further, or if they had had enough of the fight. On the morrow he might be able to tell. He had left his suitcase aboard the yacht—Aline, too, had left her things aboard. On the morrow they would get those belongings, refuse the cruise David Macarty was planning. This would mean a rupture with the Macartys, a plain talk, a defiance. And so much the better! The truth must out.

At length Fortier fell asleep. A strange dream came to him. He dreamed that Captain Wrexham was sitting on the edge of his bed, discoursing about precious stones. He could distinctly see the skipper, fingering his curly brown beard and speaking in his jerky, abrupt fashion. The presence was so vivid that the words were deeply printed on the mind of Fortier:

"Jewels? All balderdash, I tell you! Never come true. But when they do come true, they play tricks on people—never affect two persons alike. It's a rum go, that! You watch out for it, now. You can't bank on what'll happen when a man sees loot before him—jewels! Like as not, he'll go out of his head. Watch out for it!"

Fortier woke up. He blinked and peered around for the seaman—the room was quite empty. None the less those words still rang in his ears—"Watch out for it!" Fortier was actually brought wide awake by the reality of this dream.

As he lay there, he heard a faint, slight sound, like the sound of crackling wood, of rending, splintered, old wood. It was only a faint sound, almost obliterated in the splashing of the bayou waves. Yet Fortier sat up and listened. He imagined that he caught other faint sounds, proceeding from downstairs.

"Confound it, that dream has put my nerves on edge!" he muttered.

He glanced at his watch—it was one o'clock.

Rising, he slipped a dressing gown over his pajamas and quietly left the room. He walked to the stairway, and paused there. To his astonishment, he was now certain that he heard noises coming from below. Was Aline down there, searching for those jewels?

No thought of danger was in his mind as he descended the stairs; he did not try to quiet his steps. The heels of his loose slippers flapped dully on the carpeting. The sounds from below ceased abruptly.

Coming to the foot of the stairs, he saw a gleam of light below the library door, opened it, and paused in astonishment at the scene which met his eyes.

Where the desk had been was now a wreck of smashed and splintered rosewood, and over the wreck, staring at Fortier, stood Felix Macarty. Even at this first sight of the man, Fortier realized instantly that it was no other than Felix Macarty—the resemblance to David was strong enough to show forth.

The two men stood gazing at each other for a moment. Fortier was astonished to find the room in a full blaze of light, young Macarty caught in the very act of wrecking the desk—and yet quite calm about it. Felix showed no consternation. He must have heard Fortier coming, then. And, of course, he had found that letter, which Fortier had left lying so carelessly about, and had at once gone to the desk.

"Hope you found what you were looking for?" said Fortier.

Felix Macarty nodded.

"All right," he said. "All right. Get him, Jean."

Fortier spun around, not quickly enough to escape. A blow from behind caught him over the head. Before he could recover, a scurf was about his throat and he was being neatly garroted. Felix Macarty looked on with interest.

Strangled though he was, however, Fortier did not go down altogether tamely. He had a glimpse of a frightful face bending above him—the seamed, evil face of Petit Jean Hennequin as he had seen it that night in New Orleans. That thin, bearded face glowed with an infernal delight in the task under way: gleaming teeth, glittering eyes, savagely dilated nostrils, all expressed a diabolical fury.

Fortier, before he fell, struck at that face and felt his fist drive solidly home. In response, he got another blow across the skull that dazed him again—and the garrote drew tighter. He went to the floor, fell heavily, with the powerful figure of Petit Jean on top of him. The crash of the falling figures seemed to shake the house.

"Tie him up, quick!" snapped the voice of Felix Macarty. "Get a couple of the men from the boat—carry him out."

"Here!" said Petit Jean, snarling over the word. "Here—finish it now!"

"Do as I say, curse you!" snapped young Macarty. "Think I don't know what I'm doing? Carry him aboard, and do it quick!"

For a little Petit Jean bent over the figure of Fortier, then came erect and slipped away like a shadow. Felix Macarty closed the library door, darted to the desk and began wrenching away the fragments of its back.

A moment afterward he produced two boxes of plain wood. One was quite small, the other was larger—barely large enough to be slipped into a coat pocket. Both boxes were fastened only with brass catches. They had lain in a secret compartment at the back of the desk.

Felix Macarty bent over and searched again in the ruins of the woodwork. There was nothing more—not even a scrap of paper. The two little boxes, and nothing else, had been concealed there.

Satisfied of this fact, Macarty went over to the table. For a moment he hesitated, looking down at the two boxes. Then he thrust the larger box into his pocket and, with a deft movement, unfasted the cover of the smaller one. The lid flew back.

The man caught his breath as he stared down.

Lying bedded in a deep pad of black velvet, were four precious objects. Two of these were pinkish pearls, an evenly matched pair of great globes, staring up at the man with a soft luster as of concealed fire in their depths.

"The Gemini!" murmured Macarty in awed tones.

The third pearl was a most peculiar and extraordinary creation. It was not pure white, nor was it round. Instead, it was shaped like the moon just before the full—an elliptical form whose perfection was none the less remarkable. So, too, was its hue, which was a clear and most delicate chair-de-lune, transfused by that sheeny luster which comes only to the nacre of a pearl.

"The Sea-moon!" murmured Macarty.

He looked at the fourth gem—this one a stone, the Queen of Sheba, a pure white diamond as large as the nail of his little finger. From the black velvet, this thing blinked up at him with a thousand little tongues of flaming fire that licked at his brain.

Lost to all around him, the man stood transfixed, staring down at what lay in his hand. Like most other people in the world, he had rarely seen a perfect jewel; the sight of these four at once was a revelation to him. As he gazed, a transformation came into his face—a subtle change.

In the dream words of Cap'n Wrexham, "you can't bank on what'll happen when a man sees loot spread out before him." When that loot consists of four jewels, among the most perfect and beautiful in the world—jewels which, even in the Orient, had been deemed worthy of personal names—then all probability is lost. No two persons will be affected in the same way. What renders one man sane, will evoke the devil from another. The inmost hidden depth of a man's nature surges up and takes command of him.

Thus a slow change took place in Felix Macarty as he gazed at those four precious objects. The cold cruelty of his face became smoothed out, so that he looked more like his father. He had the things in his hand—they were his. The game was won. As he stared at them, the smoldering eyes of him deepened into a steady blaze of thought. One would have said that these four jewels set the brain of this man to work.

Such was actually the case.

When he caught the slight creak of the opening door, Macarty coolly shut the little box and dropped it into his pocket. Then he turned, perfectly calm and self-possessed. He saw Aline Lavergne standing on the threshold and watching him. Her eyes were comprehending and perhaps a little sad.

"Felix! So you dared this much?" she said quietly.

Macarty merely nodded. His gaze darted past her, and he perceived that the body of Fortier had vanished. A sudden blaze of exultation leaped into his eyes, as he saw how everything was cleared away for him—how the game was won! Never in his life had his evil brain worked so fast, so coherently, so perfectly as at this moment.

"Of course, Aline, of course," he said, and approached the door. "Listen, now! You are coming aboard the yacht—now, this moment! My father is there. We must have a straight talk, settle everything up—"

"So far as I am concerned," returned the girl quietly, "everything is settled and—"

"Listen to me!" Macarty lifted a hand. So strange was the authority in his face and voice, so vibrant had his personality suddenly become, that Aline paused, yielded. "If you make any noise, that foot lawyer of yours will be down here to investigate—and I'll shoot him. This is a family matter. You come aboard with me; the boat's waiting."

Perhaps the thought of Fortier struck Aline very hard. If Fortier came down here now, he would doubtless attack the intruder—and the pistol which had leaped into the hand of Felix Macarty was menacing. Besides, what had she to fear?

Her calm, deep eyes dwelt upon the man speculatively, a bit puzzled by the singular change that had come over him.

"Very well," she said unexpectedly. "Perhaps it is best that I go with you. A frank understanding will clear up things once and for all. Wait until I get a wrap."

A silken thing was flung around her. She turned and went to the stairs. So well did Felix know the deep serenity of her, that he actually stood in silence and let her go. When she had vanished, a deep breath came from him.

"Won't he said to himself. 'Everything's clear now—everything! The game's in my hands, and it's won. Safe—perfectly safe!'

He stepped to the light switch and plunged the room in darkness, then passed out in the hall. There he turned on a dim light, and waited.

Presently Aline reappeared, descending the stairs. About her figure was wrapped that long stole of ermine lined with sun-hued silk on which was brodered the name of an emperor—the stole of ermine which Wrexham had left in her room. Felix, gazing up at her, caught his breath again, so greatly did the ermine enhance the delicate beauty of the girl.

He held out his hand to her, but she quietly ignored it, and went past him. He followed. In silence they went through the open door to the gallery, and so down toward the landing. Across the stately waters a boat was heading in and Felix laughed softly to himself. He realized that Fortier had been taken aboard the yacht. Aline knew nothing of this.

Two of the crew were at the oars of the boat. Petit Jean Hennequin was in the bow. No words were exchanged. Aline stepped into the stern of the boat, and Felix Macarty followed; he made a gesture, and the boat shoved off.

As they approached the gangway of the yacht, a canoe was seen swinging there. It was the same canoe which had fetched Petit Jean and Solomon out of the bayous.

"Come below, please," said Felix to the girl, when they had gained the deck of the yacht. David Macarty was not in sight.

Aline followed him down the companionway. At the foot of this, Felix paused and threw open the door of the cabin which Aline had previously occupied.

"In there," he said. "Wait until I send for you."

She looked at him a moment, her eyes disquieted. Perhaps she meant to refuse. Before she could speak, Felix quietly took her arm and pushed her inside. He shut the door, turned the key in the lock, and pocketed it.

"Caught!" he said to himself, and laughed. "Won—the game's won!"

A slight sound at his elbow. He turned, to find Petit Jean standing there.

"Well?" demanded the outlaw, hoarsely. "Well? What luck? Find them?"

Felix reached out, clapped the man on the shoulder, broke into a low, vibrant laugh.

"All the luck in the world, mon ami!" he cried. "Come along, now, I'm running this game, understand? The orders come from me."

"Certainly," murmured the other. He looked at Felix admiringly.

Felix led the way along the passage to the little saloon cabin—a tiny room. Here, beneath a cluster of electric lights, a card table had been set up. David Macarty sat smoking nervously, a bottle of brandy and glasses at his elbow. At sight of the two men, he sprang to his feet.

"Felix! What—what luck?"

Felix looked at his father, and smiled in a singular fashion.

"Where you failed," he said slowly, "I have won."

"Won! You have them?"

Felix nodded, and dropped into a chair. He took a cigarette from his pocket, lighted it. Petit Jean dropped into a chair, likewise.

"Let's see them!" said the outlaw.

"Yes, yes!" exclaimed David Macarty, sending himself again. "Where are they?"

Felix blew a thin cloud of smoke, gazed at them for a moment from narrowed eyes, and then spoke.

In the 295 bull fights held in Spain during 1921, four bull fighters, 28,764 horses and 1692 bulls were killed.

BASEBALL DYING OUT IN ISLANDS

Lack of Interest of Sport Writers and Instructors Given as Cause.

MANILA, P. I.—Baseball, the American national pastime which was expected to replace cock-fighting here, is dying out in the Philippine Islands, and the Department of Public Instruction, by its lack of interest, is blamed for the failure by a sporting writer in a local newspaper. The Manila league is said to be the only baseball organization in the islands in a flourishing condition today.

During the last five years, sporting authorities say, the Department of Public Instruction has given no encouragement to baseball through the bureau of education. Prior to that time, it is said, the bureau of education was actively engaged in fostering the national game in the islands, with a view to eliminating the island sport of cock-fighting.

Teachers brought here from the United States, it is charged, do not play baseball and have little, if any, knowledge of the game of athletics in general.

The Philippine Amateur Athletic Federation, according to dyed-in-the-wool baseball fans, is favoring indoor baseball over the outdoor game. It is pointed out that in the new P. A. A. F. athletic annual only three pages are devoted to baseball out of a total of 384 pages.

Eleven pages are devoted to the rules of indoor baseball, while many additional pages are used for general information of the indoor game.

Incidentally, it is agreed, are as keen today as they ever were in regard to baseball. The players are developed into crack moundsmen, back-saws, in and outfielders, and while their hitting is weak, compared with American big league standards they are fast developing their stick work.

"Kindly remember, both of you, that while you may be sharing the proceeds equally with me—it is I who am giving the orders. You understand?"

They assented with a nod, a gesture, in eager silence.

"The stones are in my pocket," went on Felix, "but we are not going to inspect them just yet. First, there is going to be some talk—by me. We are in a situation that demands quick and sure action. A false move will ruin us. I have the whole thing in my brain, and I am going to tell you exactly what is to be done. You understand?"

Again a silent assent. David Macarty reached for his glass and gulped down its contents. The brandy had heartened him, fired his constitutional caution into life and action.

"You're a wonder, Felix!" he spluttered, and wiped his lips. "A wonder! What've you gone and done?"

"Enough," said Felix. "Now, kindly listen—and pay attention to me!"

WHAT WOULD YOU DO IF HUBBY ENDED CAREER

Women Can Decide Big Question In "What a Wife Learned."

"What would you do if you were a woman with ambitions and married to a man who was not in sympathy with your aspirations to make a name for yourself in the world of achievement?"

What would you do if your husband absolutely forbade your continuing the work in which you were engaged before you married him and insisted that you devote your entire time to the business of home-making?

What would you do if there had been a prenuptial agreement or tacit understanding that your marriage would not interfere with your chosen profession and your husband later refused to abide by the decision you had already made?

Sheila Russell, heroine of Thomas H. Ince's latest production, "What a Wife Learned," found herself after her marriage face to face with just such a problem when Jim Russell, Arizona ranchman, undertook to tell her what she must and must not do. The struggle between love and ambition and the reaction on the man who finds himself through his determination to keep abreast with his successful wife work out into a tremendous climax.

"What a Wife Learned" is a drama of a primitive man and a woman, a strong, virile play with one of the most compelling themes ever discussed in a screen production. The picture comes to the McSwain theater today.

Workers in Steel Mills to Have Own Golf Course Now

(By the Associated Press)

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 1.—A modern golf course for workmen in the mills at Ambridge, where structural steel is manufactured in great quantities, is the latest development of the game in the Pittsburgh district.

The plan is fathered by W. C. Townes, Jr., the veteran golfer who is fanatically interested in one of the mills, and construction of the course has been placed in the hands of Emil Loefler, professional at the Oakmont Country Club.

Ground on the hills bordering the mill village and near enough to be reached by a few minutes' walk, has been purchased, and the work will be started in a short time.

Present plans are not to make the course free to workmen who may want to play, but to keep the cost so low as to make it available for any of them. It is designed for men and women of the mill community who do not go in for other sports, and will provide them with recreation at a cost which hitherto has been looked upon as beyond their means.

A ruby is one of the varieties of the mineral corundum. Many people sneeze if strong sunlight strikes their faces. Better class natives of China own phonographs.

TANGLED ROW

By AGNES G. BROGAN

BASIL BROOKS looked from the window of his country boarding house, on the same wearisome scene; there were others who thought this beautiful countryside far from wearisome. It may have been that the sick man's state of mind was responsible for his discontent. The doctor had assured him that strained nerves would mend in the restful atmosphere.

"No pretentious retreat of neurotics," his doctor advised, "but just simple, wholesome country." And that was what the man of great business concern found in Sweet Briar. So far, it bored him immensely. From his white-curtained high window, he saw always, a church opposite. When the light at sundown shone through the stained glass, he could read there distinctly the words, "Betsy Jane Morrow."

Basil turned from the cottage window to walk down the narrow stair of the country house, and out into the night. He went aimlessly down a crooked lane. Behind old rambling houses lay a lovely stream, silver in the moonlight. In dooryards men sat companionably with their pipes. In flower-bordered gardens children played. Basil felt keenly his solitary condition. Not a friendly soul with whom to exchange a good evening. And he reflected as he walked along, even in great New York his friends numbered few. Could he call those with whom he associated as the demand of business left him scant leisure—friends indeed? Or were they merely congenial acquaintances? And the young women, whom Basil had known—well, he was resigned to his disappointment there; again, perhaps the result of an over-wearied mind. But in the recesses of that mind he carried an ideal—a fair and gentle young woman, comforting. Before him mentally flashed a well-known name, "Betsy Jane Morrow." Basil smiled, and a friendly stroller took the smile for greeting.

"How do, stranger," remarked the old man; "nice night for a walk." Presently they came to a refreshing picture—a small white house, shining in its neatness, an inviting garden, ruffled white curtains at the windows—inside the glow of shaded lights. "Now, this little place," went on the old man, "was the only decently neat house in Tangled Row. Miss Betsy Jane Morrow—Basil stared—"used to live here. An' she kept it up 'til she died an' old woman. Then she willed it to a granddaughter, on condition that she come an' live in it. The granddaughter was an orphan, working in a city office. Only been working since her father died, an' not being used to it, was pecked like. But she come out here, an' land! she's changed the whole Row. Seems you can most see the places improve, beginning near her. Shouldn't wonder after she's here a spell, if the Row won't be a place to be proud of."

Basil had not hoped to be interested, but he was. It may have been a personal interest in the late "Betsy Jane Morrow." "Why didn't the lady improve the place in her lifetime?" he asked.

The old man eagerly continued his tale. "You see," he said, "Betsy Jane" was a born fault-finder. Complained enough about her neighbors' slowness, that's sure. But that didn't seem to stir 'em up any, so she bore with 'em—none too patient. When this young woman comes to live in the empty house, my son's wife says to me—'we live in the Row'—'I'll have more work-yments to do this and that, to my house an' garden, I suppose, now that a relative of old Mrs. Morrow is going to be neighbor.' But 'Betsy Jane's' granddaughter came a smilin' to admire the plucky old flowers in our yard, and told us how glad she was to have near neighbors, an' how kind everyone was makin' her welcome. An' the folks got to tellin' one another all the pleasant things she had said about 'em, like they'd told all the complainin' things old 'Betsy Jane' had said. And everyone grew sort of friendly, 'an when the women got through helpin' the new young woman with her garden, an' fixin' up her house, why, naturally, they took to fixin' up their own—leastways those on either side."

Basil stopped deliberately, to look through ruffled curtains, to where in the light of a shaded lamp could be seen the face of a young woman. The face in the lamplight did not take from the old man's tribute.

When the bells of the village church called next morning, across the meadows, the man of tired nerves found himself answering the call. There in the light of the colored glass window sat the girl of Tangled Row, a fair and gentle young woman with lips curved as though in a smile of habitual content. Basil's ideal surely personified. A woman who could "make her own happy condition, in place of seeking."

Basil, moving down the aisle after service, absently repeated the name of the memorial window—"Betsy Jane Morrow."

The young woman of Tangled Row turned to him. "You spoke to me?" she questioned.

"The name on the window," Basil apologized.

"Also, my own," said the girl.

"You look like a new and happy man," his associates told Basil upon his return.

"I am married to 'Betsy Jane Morrow,'" he explained.

Andrew Carnegie was very fond of music and had fine organs in his homes when he became able to afford them.

SCOUTS SEEKING LEFTY WILLIAMS

Columbus, Ohio, Makes Attractive Bid for Services of Ada Twirler.

Lefty Williams, the warhorse and the lone pitching staff of the Ada club, may hurl his crooked ball in a bigger lot, according to the announcement of A. O. Green, manager of the local club and handing the negotiations by which Williams may become the property of the Columbus, Ohio, team in the American Association of A.A. rating.

A. K. Selback, scout of the Columbus club, made an offer for Williams after watching his work here last Sunday in which he beat out the Healdton club to the tune of 7-0.

Selback was favorably impressed with Williams at his appearance here and made an offer following the game, which was rejected by Green. Selback later made an offer at Muskogee and still another at Joplin.

Selback's latest offer came near the figures asked by Green and showed anxiety that the deal be closed at once. Green indicated that he would stand pat on the figures he considered just, and stated that he would accept in Williams' interest of the agreement could be brought about.

Green declared that he would handle Williams to the San Francisco club next year if a settlement could not be made with the Columbus team.

Williams has pitched practically every game of the season for the Ada club and bore a percentage of victories. His strikeout record of seventeen in one game stands high in state figures. Many of his games have borne the ear-marks of better than amateur baseball pitching.

ANADARKO RIVAL IN THREE GAMES

Homer Blankenship Here for One of Games With Old State Rivals.

Williams, Sealey and Homer Blankenship stand out as protectors of the Ada Amateur baseball club's honors here in a three-game series with Anadarko here beginning Sunday, in which old rivals of the diamond again face the count.

With three of the best pitching aces of amateur baseball in the state on his list, Manager A. O. Green of the Ada club, feels that he has more than an even break in the series.

Green had not decided the schedule on which he would work his three pitching aces but indicated that fans could be assured of the best baseball show of the season in any of the games under schedule next week.

Blankenship, one of the twirlers in the three-game series comes fresh from the Chicago White Sox where he has played an important role during the season. He is still the property of the Sox but is enroute to Galveston for some time.

Blankenship will be remembered as delivering here for fans in years gone past and is expected to hold more than his share of the mound honors from one of the tilts of the series.

Anadarko won the Daily Oklahoman's amateur championship series last year and was one of the

BILES-NICHOLSON

In a ceremony that bespoke all the beauty and sacredness of the marital vows, Reverend Moody A. Nicholson of Tecumseh officiated in the marriage of his sister, Miss Julia Nicholson to Mr. Hugh Biles, both of this city, at the home of Mrs. Olive Couch, 119 North Mississippi avenue at 11 o'clock today.

Two solo renditions, "I love you truly" and "All for you" by Miss Marguerite Montgomery of Whitewright, Texas and accompanied at the piano by Miss Gertrude Montgomery, cousins of the bride, were offered before the couple responded to Mendelssohn's Wedding March and stood before the altar of ferns to receive the vows of marriage.

While the brother of the bride pronounced the ceremony that lented its impressiveness to the occasion, Miss Gertrude Montgomery played in hushed accompaniment "Canzone Amorosa," a Venetian love song.

The bride wore a beautiful brown traveling dress with accessories to match.

The happy couple departed at noon for Eureka Springs, Arkansas where they will enjoy a honeymoon of two weeks at that popular resort, after which they will be at home to their friends at 218 East Thirteenth street.

Only the intimate friends of the bride and groom were present for the ceremony with a few of the nearest relatives of out of the city.

Out-of-town guests present were Reverend J. B. Nicholson of Tecumseh; Mrs. C. L. Manning and Miss Marguerite Montgomery of Whitewright, Texas and Booth Strange of Okmulgee.

LONDON.—During the war Great Britain seized a German submarine cable running from Emden to the United States, and at the conclusion of hostilities one end of the line was drawn up to England and the other diverted to Halifax.

Today at Halifax the wire joins the telegraph system which extends from Halifax to Vancouver and thence under the sea to Fiji, Norfolk Island, Australia and New Zealand.

As a result, messages can now be sent from London to the Antipodes in 30 minutes. Thus are the far-flung parts of the British empire held together.

LEGION WINNING ITS FIGHT-MONK

State Legion Commander Says Legion's Fight is for Americanism.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Aug. 1.—"George Wilson has been removed and the American Legion has won its fight," is the statement of Dudley Monk, Okmulgee, Department Commander of the American Legion of Oklahoma.

"It was a fight for Americanism and for the integrity of our schools," continued Monk. "There is not room enough in Oklahoma for both radicals and the American Legion—the Legion intends to stay. The safety of our institutions and the perpetuation of our government depends upon the intelligence and the patriotism of our youth. No man whose patriotism is subject to dispute. Our teachers must be Americans above reproach."

"The American Legion was not alone in this fight. Ours was a common cause with the good citizens of the state. Oklahoma's patriotic press was our staunch and effective attorney. The governor, in bringing about Wilson's removal effectuated the wishes of the people of Oklahoma."

"George Wilson, the individual, does not concern the Legion but the Legion opposes and always will oppose George Wilson, the incumbent of or the threatened incumbent of any office of public trust."

"The American Legion will continue its fight until radicalism is driven from Oklahoma."

The American Legion requested that George Wilson be given no appointment to any position of public trust when they learned that he had made a statement during the campaign in substance as follows: "Whenever I see an American Legion button, I feel like taking a gun and shooting a hole through it." On July 17 the Legion's formal demand was made that the Governor remove George Wilson or remove the members of the Board of Agriculture which selected Wilson as the President of the Oklahoma A. and M. College, and replace them with members who would remove Wilson. Governor Walton last week followed the latter course, and the new members of the Board removed Wilson. New members appointed were Harry Blake of Duncan, and Mrs. Frank King of Kingfisher. Mrs. King is an actual "dirt farmer," residing on her farm near Kingfisher.

WEBB CITY.—A school controversy between this city and Shidler, over division of districts, is said to threaten the holding of school in both towns this fall. Webb City claims 21 sections in its school district, leaving Shidler 9. The county commissioners are to pass on the dispute, and it is said that if their decision is not accepted the matter will be carried to the district court.

LIES AND LIES
"Say Ada Lies Over Big Pool of Gas," is a headline in a Dallas paper which, we think, is a little too bitter. Ada might have exaggerated a bit, naturally, but there doesn't seem to be occasion to apply the short and ugly word.—Ft. Worth Star Telegram.

Yes, it has been pretty clearly demonstrated that Ada lies over a big gas field, hence does not have to lie about it. Lying over the gas pool is a fact of which Ada is proud, but lying about it is unnecessary.

STOP MAIL ORDER HOUSE COMPETITION

An executive of one of the largest mail order houses in the country recently declared that his firm had one bureau employing several persons whose duty it is to read every week in country newspapers from all over the United States.

"There is not a paper of any consequence in our trade territory that our bureau does not get," he stated. "This bureau looks over all these papers carefully and whenever we find a town where the merchants are not advertising to any great extent in their local papers, we immediately flood that territory with our literature. This always brings results that are far in excess of those obtained by the same effort put forth in territory where the merchants advertise."

The "Sporting Goods Gazette" in commenting upon this statement points out that:

"This presents an unanswerable argument in favor of the retailer advertising regularly in his own local newspaper. The mail order bugaboo has long been a thorn in the side of the legitimate retail business, and if they follow the plan as above described it is only natural to presume that the other large mail order houses have bureaus of a similar nature."

"As a matter of truth, he virtually tells us that the best way we can beat the mail order bugaboo is for us to advertise regularly. Such a statement coming from a man in his position hardly needs to be further emphasized."—The Lion's Share.

WHY LANGSTON HOWLS

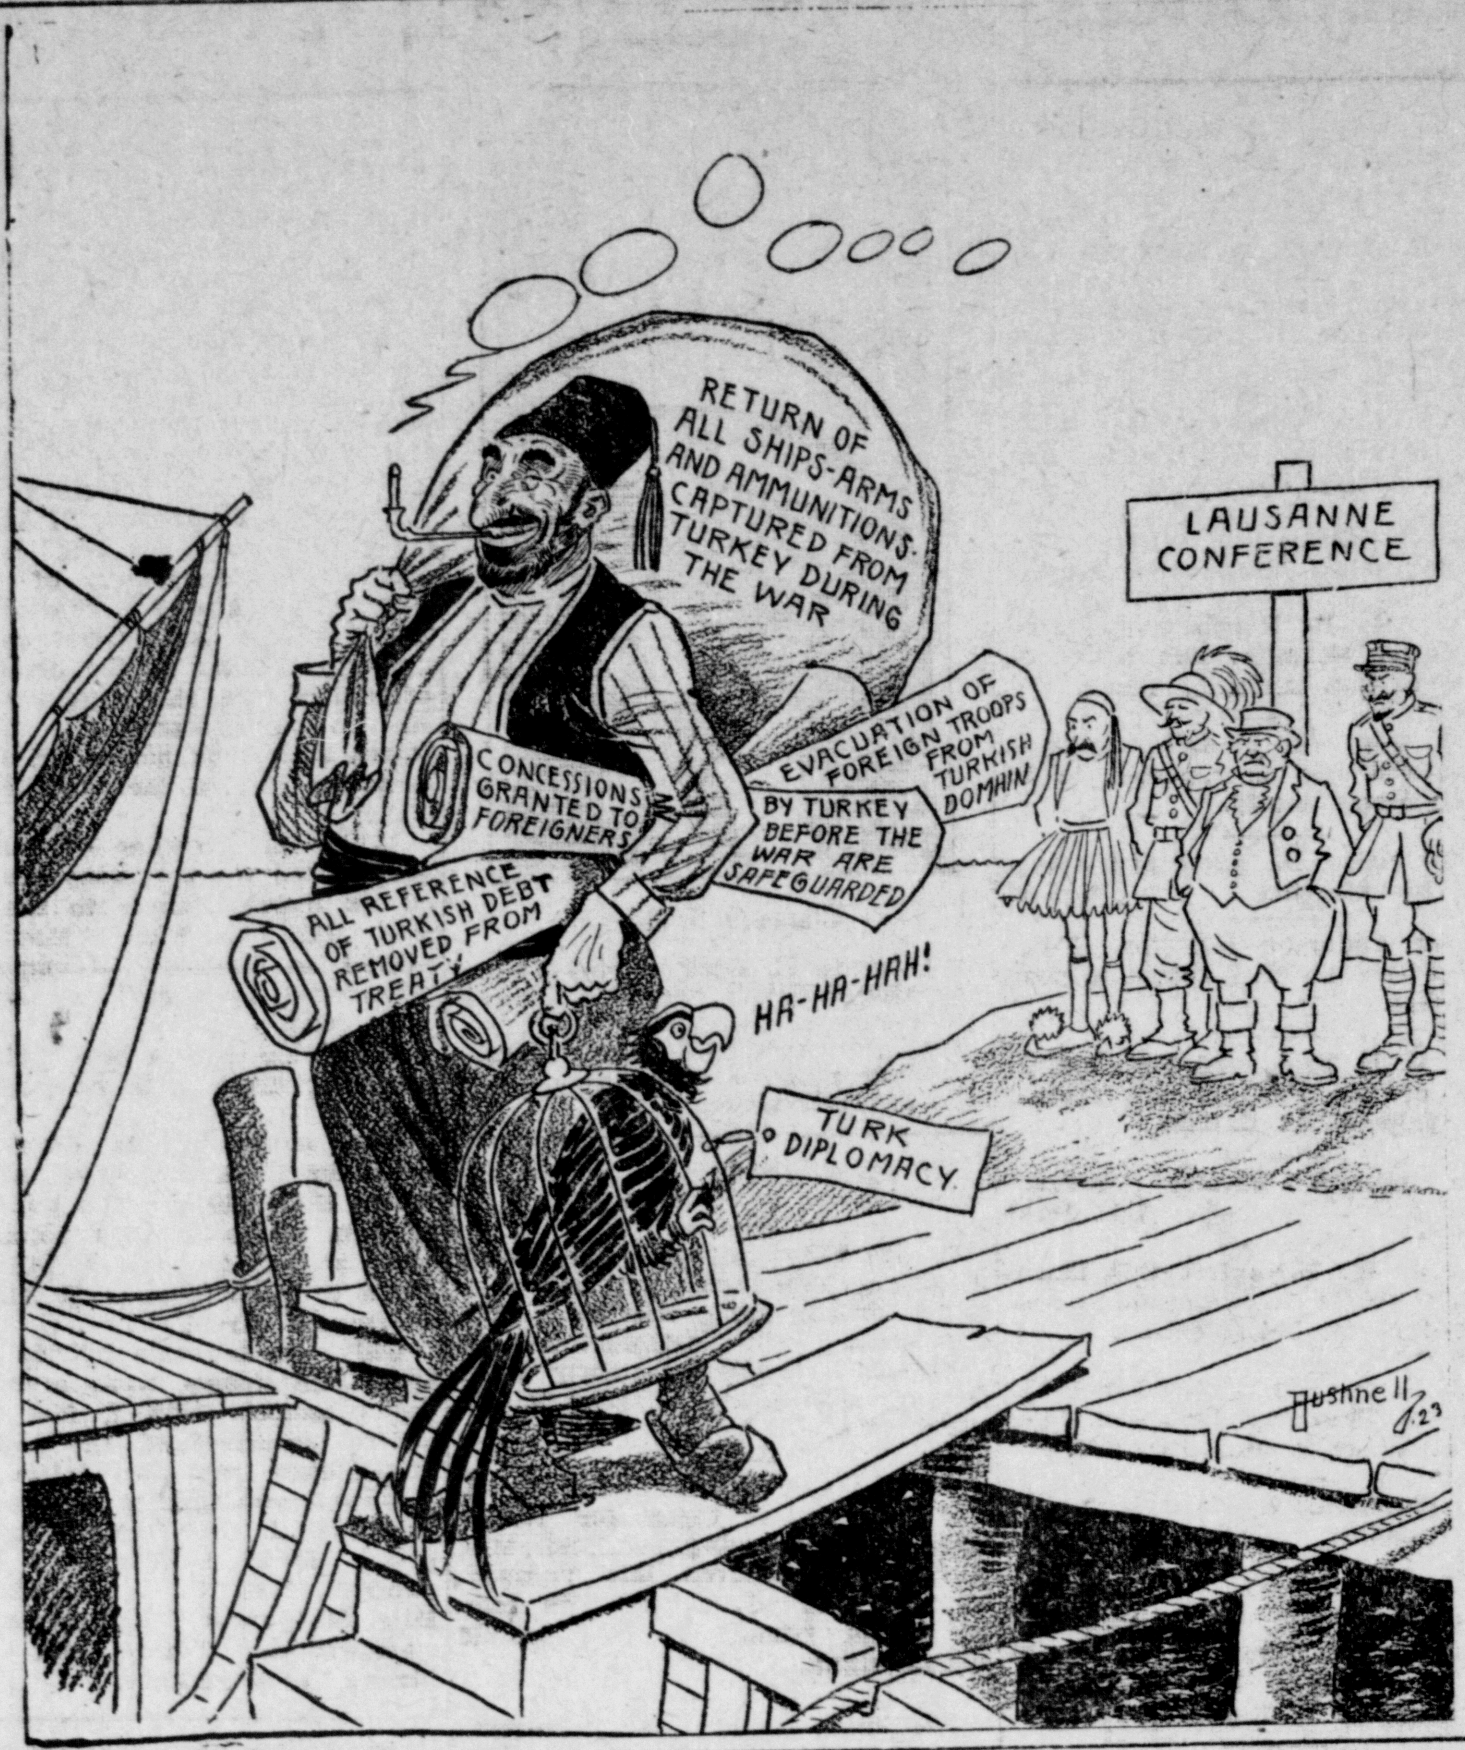

Now that Luther Langston seems to have lost his grip on the state administration, he and other Reconstruction leaguers are denouncing the governor and charging that the governor was subsidized by E. W. Marland, Waite Phillips and other independent oil men. They charge, and it appears to be true, that these men have given up thousands of dollars to Doctor Bynum representing Governor Walton. It is our information that most of this money was collected and spent in the shape of salaries to the various Reconstruction leaguers, who had the O. K. of Luther Langston. We understand that it took several thousands per month to pay the salaries and "expenses" of these self-constituted leaders and probably the reason why Langston and his crowd is now raising such an outcry is that the "golden stream" has been shut off. It is our information that the governor and Doctor Bynum decided sometime ago that they would not continue to collect money from the oil interests of the state to pay salaries to Langston's various henchmen. Langston and the "Oklahoma Leader" are not telling anything new when they say that money for the Walton campaign and money to pay the deficit after the campaign was collected from the oil men. Everybody knew that at the time. The joke is, that these Reconstruction league leaders thought they were keeping it secret.—Okmulgee Democrat.

The value of character as a business asset was once expressed by J. P. Morgan on the witness stand when he declared that he would readily loan some men a million dollars without collateral while there were others whom he would not lend $10,000 if they had a million collateral. Morgan was a good judge of men and was not in the habit of turning loose his cash unless he was certain it was coming back, but he fully appreciated the value of moral as well as tangible security.

Edward Bok is getting a lot of advertising out of his offer of a prize of $100,00 for a plan for world peace that will work. It is not likely that the money will be paid out any time soon unless some one can devise a way of changing human nature and eliminating hatred and suspicion from man's makeup. The Golden Rule is a plan which cannot be improved on but no one has found a way of making the world put it into force.

No matter how John D. Rockefeller acquired his fabulous wealth, the human race is being benefitted through it. The medical researches financed by this money have already brought relief to untold millions of the race and the knowledge thus acquired will be as lasting as time itself. Then, too, the medical research department is only one of the varied activities supported by money given by the oil king.

YOU AND FORD

(Ardmoreite)
It took Henry Ford twelve years to sell his first million cars. It took him only six months to sell his eighth million.

Here you have a clear-cut illustration of a principle that regulates success in nearly every field of endeavor. It is so universal a principle that it is almost a natural law.

This is the principle: Getting started is nine-tenths of the battle for success. Once we are "on our feet"—definitely progressing toward our goal—our progress increasingly becomes easier.

Every self-made rich man, looking back over his career, knows that it is more difficult to accumulate the first $1,000 than any $10,000 that follows. Hence, the expression: "Money breeds money."

The fastest locomotive has a lot of preliminary work, devoted to mechanical tests, inspection and getting up steam, during which period the locomotive doesn't travel at all. It stands still until ready to make its fast run to destination.

The championship prizefight is only a matter of minutes. But it is won or lost in the years of training beforehand.

It took the allied armies more than four years to develop the strength and momentum for the comparatively short campaign that knocked Germany out. At many times during those long years, and right up to within a few months of the German surrender, it looked as if the allied preliminary work had been largely wasted. But it was not wasted. The tables were turned, and success came, virtually overnight.

After the seeds sprout in the garden, comes a period in which the outlook seems almost hopeless except to the experienced gardener. The fight against weeds and cut-worms and insects is a neck and neck contest. And then, almost overnight, the garden wins the fight. Thereafter it requires comparatively little care. The harvest is won or lost in the discouraging period early in the game.

Why, then, ever allow ourselves to become discouraged no matter what we are attempting or how great our setbacks?

Night is blackest just before the dawn. And the average career is bluest just before we win.

Most of us are nearer success than we realize. Success may even be right around the corner. Trouble is, the majority of people get discouraged and slow down their efforts at the critical moment when they are on the verge of "getting across."

The leaders of men are the ones who hang on in the crisis when the others lose heart and let go.

CENSUS REVEALS GROWTH OF AMERICAN COLONY IN JAPAN

TOKIO.—Britishers, who formerly had the largest foreign colony in Japan with the exception of the Chinese, now are being given a close run by the Americans.

Returns just issued show that there are 2,562 Britishers resident in Japan and 2,549 Americans. There has also been an increase in the number of Russians, composed largely of political refugees.

There are just under 30,000 foreigners resident in the islands, of whom nearly 20,000 are Chinese.

MARKET REPORTS IS NEW SYSTEM

Thousands of Farmers Over State Receive Latest Crop Information.

(By the Associated Press)

OKLAHOMA CITY, Aug. 1.—Ten thousands Oklahoma farmers are receiving daily crop market notes by mail, under the direction of the state market commission. A radio market service, which is to be set in operation soon, will reach 800 to 1,000 individual cooperative stations, according to Gene Matlock, secretary of the commission.

The daily market reports are received at Fort Worth, Tex., where they are sent by leased telegraph wire from the market bureau of the U. S. department of agriculture, Washington. They are mailed from here to the Oklahoma subscribers, to reach a mailing list furnished and being continuously supplemented by the Oklahoma market commission. The service is entirely at the expense of the federal government, and does not cost the subscribers or the state of Oklahoma a cent, according to Matlock.

Matlock said the reports are mailed at Fort Worth at 5 o'clock each evening, and reach many subscribers in southern Oklahoma the next morning.

The mailing list is being supplemented by lists the market commission field men send in daily to the secretary, he said. He declared that the list has been built up from 7,000 to 10,000 subscribers within the last month.

The reports cover crop, livestock and produce markets as gathered by the federal market bureau from all over the United States daily.

Matlock said the radio market service would be set up as soon as $90 to 1,000 prospective subscribers can be assured. He said that market commission field men are soliciting commodity marketing associations, farmer unions and cooperative association locals all over the state to install radio telephones receiving sets.

He said that the Ninth legislature appropriated a sum of $5,000 for each of the next two years which he would be able to expend for the purchase of a receiving and sending radio set of enough power to receive the reports from Washington and send them out over Oklahoma. He pointed out that receiving sets powerful enough to pick up reports from Oklahoma City at any point in the state can be installed for less than $100.

Ancient Coins Found Near Etna

(By the Associated Press)

ROME.—Interesting relics in the form of two large brass vases filled with pieces of gold, and believed by experts to belong to a period 300 or 400 years B. C., have, by order of the government, been removed from Ognina, which is situated at the foot of Mount Etna, to Rome.

The vases were discovered in a fissure in the ground under an old wall, after a slight earthquake, by a deaf and dumb peasant. The news of the find only reached the authorities when the peasant offered the vases for sale to collectors.

Produce Market Bulletin
CHICAGO, July 30.—Butter production has been shortened considerably during the last ten days, due to extremely hot weather. This is reflected in the market price for butter and butterfat. Today the Chicago market on 90 score Standards is 40 1/2 cents, as compared with 28 1/2 cents a week ago and 32 1/2 cents a year ago.

Offerings of butter from Denmark, Holland, and Estonia were on a considerably higher basis. This has had the effect of further strengthening the market. Arrivals of foreign butter in New York were much lighter last week. As butterfat prices are higher than a year ago, there is every incentive to continue production on a large scale.

There is a seasonable decrease in receipts of eggs, causing an advance in market quotations. It has also brought about a situation where dealers are withdrawing from storage almost as many eggs as have been put in. This has generally been done, because of the desire on the part of dealers to secure eggs of satisfactory quality.

The market on live fowl reacted last week to 26 cents in New York, at which price it was carried thru out the week.

Receipts of dressed poultry were much heavier than a year ago, and this fact, considering the excess stocks of poultry in storage, prevented any material change in the price for dressed stock.

Movement of broilers is increasing, particularly in Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, and Tennessee are due to the fact that chickens are hatched earlier in these sections. There has also been a movement of some cars east from Utah. As the movement of spring broilers becomes heavier, it is expected prices will work lower.

Report is Given On Prospect for Broom Corn Crop

OKLAHOMA CITY, July 28.—First broom corn reports of the season are being received at the state board of agriculture from G. B. Alguire, of the bureau of agricultural economics of the U. S. department of agriculture.

In a report made public today, Alguire said that the Lindsay market is almost ready to open, and that interest of broom corn buyers from all over the country is centering there. Some of the buyers have already arrived in Lindsay, he said, and others are expected within a few days.

Alguire, who has observed broom corn marketing in Oklahoma for several seasons, on behalf of the federal department of agriculture, said in his report he has recently been in the Rio Grande river valley, where the broom corn harvest is begun each year. He said that the southern crop is not large enough to set a scale of prices and open the market, but that when the Lindsay sales begin, "it is confidently expected that buying will become active and the trend of prices necessarily become well defined."

Speaking of conditions in the Rio Grande valley, Alguire said: "The general tone of the market for the week appears to have shown considerable strength. Total shipments to date were 146 carloads, with 26 carloads in storage and 17 carloads estimated held at scattered points for shipping facilities."

Railroad Planned for Fujiyama
(By the Associated Press)

TOKIO.—The famous sacred mountain of Japan, Fujiyama, may eventually be invaded by a railroad. Plans are on foot to build a line to its summit.

If this enterprise is carried out the mountain climbers of Japan and many visitors to the country will be deprived of one of their great thrills and adventures. To come to Japan without at least attempting to climb Fuji is to make the visit only partly complete, while with many Japanese it is a sacred duty to at least once reach the top of the mountain and look down into the wonderful crater.

GROGER THANKFUL

"I had been sick nearly 20 years with stomach trouble and was slowly starving to death as everything I ate caused terrible gas and pain and my food did not digest. I was reduced to 115 pounds. A friend advised me to take May's Wonderful Remedy about 4 months ago, which I did and now weigh 151 lbs., and can eat anything. I am very thankful for May's Wonderful Remedy." It removes the catarrhal mucus from the intestinal tract, and allays the inflammation which causes practically all stomach, liver and intestinal ailments, including appendicitis. LENGTH OF WORK WEEK LESS NOW

Reduction of Thirty-Six Minutes Per Week Over Past Two Years.

(By the Associated Press)
NEW YORK, July 31.—The length of the working week of the average American employee has declined 36 minutes in the last two years, according to a statement by the National Bureau of Economic Research summarizing the results of a nation-wide investigation which was undertaken for the Business Cycle committee of President Harding's Conference on Unemployment.

Outlining the results of the investigation, Dr. Willford L. King, of the staff of the National Bureau of Economic Research, under whose supervision the facts were gathered, said: "According to some historians, our great-grandfathers thought 12 hours a reasonable day's work. For more than a hundred years, however, the length of the working day has been declining steadily until the average American in the first quarter of 1922 was expected by his employer to work only 50.3 hours per week, just a trifle more than the eight hours for six days set forth as an ideal by reformers of a generation or two ago. The detailed figures covering all industries in the United States show that the length of the working week declined 36 minutes during the two years covered by the study."

Of all classes of employers reporting, those engaged in rendering domestic and personal service record the longest full-time hours for those working under their direction, the average being slightly more than eight hours daily for a seven day week. Farmers and retail merchants each require over 53 hours of work per week from their employees. Employers in a considerable group of industries usually call for less than 48 hours per week from their workers. This group includes building and construction, finance, public and professional service, paper and printing establishments, and factories making textiles, clothing, leather and leather goods.

"The figures presented in the report," continued Dr. King, "indicate that the man who is anxious to have a steady job in dull times as well as in good times should seek a position with a small employer. However, if he followed this course during the last few years, he may have discovered that he gained less than he expected by the choice, for the tables show that in the last quarter for which reports are available he was asked to work 53 hours each week in the small enterprise instead of 47.8 that the large establishment on the average required him to serve. This difference is partly accounted for by the fact that farmers form so large a portion of small employers."

"However the farmers are not the only ones of this class that call for longer hours than the average. In 9 out of 17 industries, employers hiring fewer than 21 workers required their employees to work over fifty hours per week in the first quarter of 1922. In the group comprising 21 to 100 workers, long hours for employees proved to be even more common than in the small enterprises at the same date, for 12 out of the 17 industrial groups had full time hours of more than 50 per week. Only in concerns employing over 100 men were shorter hours the rule. In that group only 7 of the 17 industries expected their men to work as much as 50 hours per week."

NEW DISTRIBUTION FOR ENID LIBRARY

(By the Associated Press)
ENID, Okla., July 31.—A method of library book distribution originated here and known as "The Enid System," is rapidly making Enid a familiar name in every library of the United States.

George Southard, local Lions club delegate to the recent national convention of Lions clubs at Atlantic City, N. J., declared upon his return that the system was adopted at the convention to be used by all the 800 clubs in the country to increase circulation of free public libraries.

The Enid system is explained as a method which will give every person in the United States the privilege of a large library. Fifty books are sent out from a central library to a local station, and from there distributed among neighbors until each has read every book in the set.

Under the plan as worked out here, 60 days are given the people in a single locality to read the books, and then the books are sent on to a new territory. At the same time, another set of volumes is sent to the first station.

There are now 75 units of books circulating in Garfield county, all sent out from the Carnegie Library here.

It has been said that the library extension work is further advanced here than at any other place in the country.

There are seven permanent libraries in the county, at the following places: Garber, Fairmont, Covington, Waukomis, Breckenridge, Kremlin and Enid.

EVERYBODY CATCHES 'EM AT LONG KEY

LONG KEY, Fla.—Winter or summer, everybody catches 'em at Long Key.

There are millions of the big fighting 'uns in the waters hereabouts. The coral reefs which make nets impossible afford sport royal for the amateur. The presence of vast numbers of fish for some time past have led experts to predict an unequalled season next winter.

Among all the big game fish at this famous fishing camp, the great leaping sail fish reaching eight feet in length, is the favorite. He is one of the swiftest swimming fish in the ocean. When frightened he will swim at least sixty or seventy miles an hour, according to several reliable and experienced fishermen at Long Key. He can easily overtake the swift mackerel or blue runner on which he feeds. When hooked he passes through the water like lightning, swifter almost than the eye can follow. When endeavoring to release the hook, he lashes the water into foam as he propels himself almost upright above the surface, "walking on the water."

He has been seen to jump 20 to 30 times, sometimes clearing 40 feet of water. He has a bony mouth and is accustomed to nip the bait with his bill before seizing it. It is no unusual experience to have two men in a launch each with a sail fish on his hook. The sail fish runs up to 150 pounds, but is generally caught at from 40 to 70 pounds. The Amberjack, running up to 100 pounds, is a game fish and can be lured right up to the side of a boat.

Groupers and sea bass, the latter reaching up to 500 pounds, can be caught still fishing or trolling. Barracuda, cavalle, of which there are 65 varieties, lady fish, bone fish, pompano, runners, and sea trout can be caught from the beach.

Long Key, a paradise for big game fishermen, is on the Overseas Extension of the Florida East Coast Railroad, sixty miles north of Key West.

RUSSIAN CRITICS GET NO APPLAUSE

World Holds Out no Sympathy to Harrowing Talks of Bolshevism.

(By the Associated Press)
RIGA, Aug. 1.—Latvia has ceased to be the sole gateway to Russia for investigators from all over the world. Berlin is now the chief diving board for politicians, educators, concession chasers and relief workers who are about to plunge into red Russia. Many of them go by aeroplane. Some travel from Berlin to Moscow by way of Warsaw, and others enter thru Finland and Estonia. But most of the foreign visitors emerge from Russia through Riga. They are British, American and German, with a sprinkling of Italians, Czechs and Scandinavians.

Visitors coming out of Moscow in breathless haste to tell the world "the real truth" about Russia are much surprised, frequently, to find that their hurried observations do not attract much attention. Since the beginning of international relief work in famine-stricken Russia there has been such a large number of visitors that it is no novelty for Riga to have scores of passengers out of Russia in a single day, and diplomats and journalists are well-sated with the narratives of enthusiasts who expect the world to be surprised that they were not killed.

It is no longer novel to hear that the opera in Moscow is the most "wonderful in all the world"; that the soviet government is "more securely established than any in Europe"; that Moscow "is a safer place to be than New York City," and that "illiteracy has been stamped out in the red army." The statement that "perfectly clean sleeping cars are operated between Moscow and Petrograd and between Moscow and Riga," also has lost its novelty.

Correspondents who have been listening for two years to the tales of visitors to Russia, who have spent a few days in the great Russian cities, know exactly what most of them will say. If they disclosed their sympathy with Bolshevism before they entered, they generally come out with words of high praise. If they were critical before they went in, they are generally more critical when they come out. In other words, the week-enders in Russia generally have their minds made up before they go in, and their statements on emerging are about as monotonous as off-repeated phonograph rolls.

Of course, there are many visitors to Russia who remain there for a considerable time and give thought and study to the situation. These usually have little to say when they go in and less when they come out. They generally are not in politics; they are not about to take the stump on the Russian question, and they are not rushing into print with their views on every phase of the Russian situation.

PADEREWSKI PURCHASES TICKETS TO OWN SHOW

(By the Associated Press)
PARIS, I.—Igor Jan Paderewski, the famous Polish pianist and composer, received one of the heartiest welcomes accorded him since his return to the concert stage when he appeared before a Paris audience recently. Thousands of people thronged to see him pass on his way to the theatre, and he was again besieged when the concert, a benefit affair, was concluded.

The French press re-told at great length the story of how the noted artist was expelled from Russia years ago by Emperor Alexander III, after Paderewski had played before the court.

"You are a great artist, and an honor to Russia," the emperor is reported to have said.

"Pardon, Your Majesty," replied Paderewski. "To Poland."

The next day the pianist received an order to leave Russia, and had never returned since.

The newspapers here also mentioned the fact that on the day of his first concert Paderewski drove to the theatre box office and purchased nearly a hundred seats at regular prices, which he distributed among his friends.

His only request to the management was that he be given a dressing room, so that he could let his hands soak in very hot water for half an hour before the concert. He explained that he had found this the best way to make them supple.

Singing Frogs Again on Sale (By the Associated Press)
TOKIO, Aug. 1.—The shops of Japan are this month offering for sale the Kajika, or "singing frog," the harbinger of the rainy season. The animals are selling readily, although the prices range from one to ten yen whereas a few years ago they could be bought for a few sen. But like everything else it is a question of supply and demand, and while the gatherers find the frogs harder to get, the number of purchasers has increased.

The frog will sing for hours at a time and a couple of files a day is all he wants in the way of nourishment.

Leon Trotsky, Present Ruler Of Russia Puts No Check On Efforts

MOSCOW.—Since Premier Lenin became seriously ill, Leon Trotsky, Soviet Russia's War Commissar, has become the foremost figure in the Soviet government. He has no working day. Every workman, laborer, or employee in Soviet Russia has an 8-hour working day conspicuously looked after by the Trade Union Council and guarded by the Labor Code. But Trotsky has none. His working day is much over 8 hours and as regards time, day and night are treated alike.

Trotsky begins his day with the newspapers. They serve him as a means of every day human connection and business information. He reads them just as he would listen to a report by one of his officers and very often the newspaper information is followed by quick interpretations and action.

Very often a news telegram, a reporter's item, or a quite uninteresting interview paves the road for an important decision. Then at various times during the day and night, Trotsky reads and dictates.

He always reads with a pencil in hand, which he holds like a surgeon holds his instrument. He underlines, annotates, numbers the author's thoughts, associates them, makes polemical notes—and the book returns from his anatomical desk like an embalmed corpse.

He dictates queries, resolutions, departmental instructions and advice, orders, articles, pamphlets, brochures, friendly and sarcastic letters, replies, reminiscences—short and long ones, dry and free, always bright and stylishly polished. Everything clear, exact and businesslike.

A detachment of cyclists and motor-cyclists, day and night, carry all over Moscow with war-time speed this state business literature of the War Commissar.

During the day, the quiet of his cabinet is beset by telephone calls. In this way which Trotsky values as an economic means of communication, he disposes of half his work.

In his work, Trotsky does only what he himself must and can do, everything else being completed by other—his assistants. He writes an article, others—librarians—will find for him the necessary quotations from Marx or any other writer, as the case may be.

Trotsky's office is a combination of simple but mighty things; stenographers, telephone switchboards and a good automobile—everything which curtails movement and serves to economize energy. He rests by passing from one work to another or indulging in sports, when feeling very tired. His favorite sports are hunting, fishing, croquet and chess.

called, were asked to prepare such a bill by Governor Walton for submission to the legislature as an administrative measure. It was never presented, however, due to the opposition of certain of the governor's more conservative counselors.

First Tilt Goes to League.
In announcing that J. P. Russell, president of the reorganized farmer-labor union, had been elected to the board to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of W. A. Villines, a new victory has been won by Langston and the league over Patrick S. Nagle, sponsor of the so-called council of twelve, since Russell was one of the men relied upon by Nagle to perfect the new organization that was to supersede the farm and labor groups.

The full executive board of the league was in attendance at the sessions Sunday and Monday, including J. B. Tosh and W. D. Henry, farmers' union; John L. Britton, United Mine workers; Frank Thornton, railway brotherhoods; J. Luther Langston, federation of labor; R. L. Thurmond and J. P. Russell, farm-labor union.

Austrians Moving to Berlin (By the Associated Press)
BERLIN, Aug. 1.—Living is so much cheaper here today than in Vienna, due to the fact that the German mark is worth so much less than the Austrian crown that many Austrians are said to be moving to the German capital.

Reports from Vienna describe long lines of people waiting day and night in front of the German consulate, seeking the proper endorsement on their passports to cross the frontier.

To Pass on Law.
The bill has been prepared by Judge Porter Newman, Durant and E. S. Hurt, socialist lawyer of Madrid, it was stated. The board Tuesday designated two of its members, John L.
